

PLACE NEBRASKA IN HUGHES COLUMN

Republican Leaders There
More Confident Since Nominee Toured the State.

DEMOCRATS SCOUT CLAIM

Special Dispatch to The Star.

OMAHA, Neb., October 23.—The republicans of Nebraska are not ready to say they have the enemy on the run, but they are experiencing a period of renewed confidence, following the trip of Charles E. Hughes through a large section of the state. The republican nominee did not leave a blazing trail behind him, nor did he cause the moon to stand still. He did, however, impress Nebraska with his strong convictions and determination. The rank and file of thinking republicans, and even many democrats, agreed that Mr. Hughes supplied the necessary and timely element which has heartened the lagging lines in the republican battle front.

It is not to be denied that just about the time Mr. Hughes entered this state the republicans were nursing dire thoughts of the future. The writer made the entire Nebraska trip with the Hughes special train. The situation was no secret. Some of the republican leaders were whispering up their courage. The state chairman, Ed Beach, on the evening before the arrival of the Hughes train admitted that the democrats in this state got a flying start with their "he-kept-us-out-of-power" and "he-kept-us-out-of-office" line of conversation. He was not exactly throwing up his hands, but he was not a personification of roseate thoughts.

Mr. Hughes Well Received.

Then Hughes came. Disabusing the mind of any partisan bias, it must be admitted that Mr. Hughes was well received in this state. The crowds were large in numbers and attentive. If wild enthusiasm is the standard by which to measure a nominee's vote-getting ability, then the cause of Hughes in this state remains in the balance. Mr. Hughes gave the people something to think over during the remaining days of the campaign. It was evident that he was not playing for galleries. He injected a new spirit into the republican camp. He was not a disappointment, nor was he a great surprise.

His reception at Lincoln, the state capital, was an indication that the people of the state were interested in the man and his message. A similar demonstration awaited him at Omaha, in the auditoriums of these cities he spoke to audiences which gave serious attention and applauded liberally.

When Mr. Hughes reached this state he learned that Vice President Marshall had succeeded in this statement: "A vote for Hughes is a vote for war" and that charge was winking its flight by the grace of democratic assistance. The republican nominee placed stress on the claim that he is a man of peace, with full appreciation, however, of what is meant when the spokesman of a nation uses the words "strict accountability" when addressing another nation. He addressed himself assiduously to the tariff issue, which he regarded of vital importance in this campaign.

Straightens Out Republicans.

"Will the visit of Mr. Hughes to Nebraska have sufficient carrying power to place the state in the republican column?" is a question frequently asked. Judging by all of the signs which are of any value in arriving at a conclusion of this nature, it may be said that Mr. Hughes made the fight more acute in this state and he straightened out the republican ranks. The democratic leaders, naturally, do not attach great importance to the Hughes speechmaking tour.

Hughes showed dexterity with his hammer. He was long on criticism of what the administration has done, and he was short when advancing any constructive policies of his own. It is the gist of the democratic resume of the situation. Nebraska democracy is carrying an air of sublime confidence. The democrats say they are so confident that they have concluded their speaking campaign except for the state ticket, which remains in a very turbid condition.

Among the optimistic features of the republican side of the argument might be mentioned again the German vote, of which there are approximately 45,000 in this state. The Germans will show considerable strength for Hughes. It is claimed there will be a strong Catholic vote for Hughes. On the other hand, it is expected there will be a substantial vote among the railroad men and organized labor for Wilson.

Reasons for Supporting Hughes.

A German citizen, head of a business institution, was asked why he intended to vote for Hughes, the first republican presidential nominee he has ever supported. His reply was: "It is not because I am a German. There are deeper reasons. I have studied these matters carefully and it is my conviction that President Wilson is not a man of positive convictions. I paid a man five to go to Washington to check up several matters before I made this decision. I am opposed to our Mexican policy, the Adamson bill and the Wilson tariff policy. I was born in Germany, but would give all of my wealth for four."

and my life in support of my adopted country, even if we should be engaged with my native land."

Counting such instances as the one related may be found some progressives who see in Wilson the Moses of progressive politics. The rank and file of progressives, however, have lined up with the republicans of the state, leaving a fairly sharp line between the two big parties.

Chance for Republican Governor.

The election of A. L. Sutton, republican gubernatorial nominee, grows more certain. That the state will vote "dry" is as sure as it is possible to make any political forecast. Mr. Sutton is aligned with dry forces, as opposed to the democratic nominee.

Efforts are being made to arrange a meeting for Theodore Roosevelt during the last week of the campaign. The republican state committee is of the opinion that Roosevelt is just the man to put the finishing touches on the campaign—if he will forget the Lusitania.

From all of which it may fairly be judged that the republicans believe they have a good fighting chance to carry the state, and they are not letting any green grass grow all around, all around—not a bit of it.
